1. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: The instant claims are neither taught nor suggested by the prior art. Gladden, Mifune et al. and Gidley et al. teach various metal sheets attached to a rubber magnet by means of different adhesives, but none teach or suggest the two layers of adhesives required by the instant claims. Neither JP 2004 150859 (abstract) and JP 2004 028877 (abstract) qualify as prior art in this instant application. Even if they were prior art, neither teach or suggests the use of a specific two layers of adhesive as required. Abe et al. teach a rubber composition for use in a magnetic encoder but also fail to teach or suggest a two layer adhesive.

Finally the Examiner draws attention to JP 2001 260235. This was cited as an "X/Y" reference against the claims in the international search report. The Examiner has obtained a machine generated English language translation. While this is not a very good translation, it is sufficient for the skilled artisan to determine that this reference fails to teach or suggest the instant claims as found in the amended claims filed 6/10/05. This teaches metal and rubber bonded by means of a two layered adhesive system. However the totality of the teachings differ from that claimed in numerous ways. First the application is silent as to a magnetic rubber and there is nothing that would lead the skilled artisan to magnetize the rubber therein, particular such that the resulting structure can function as a magnetic encoder. In addition, one must have to pick and choose from among many metals, first adhesives and second adhesives to arrive at the particular adhesives used in the claimed encoder. Finally, it is unclear if an organopolysiloxane is present. While the first adhesive does include a silane, there is nothing to indicate if this silane reacts to form an organopolysiloxane or not. Note, for instance, that the silane is present only in an amount of up to 20 wt% of the total first adhesive. From this one cannot be sure that the silane undergoes adequate condensation with other silanes to form an organopolysiloxane. In view of these various points, this reference simply is not sufficient to teach or render obvious the instant claims.

To clarify the breadth of the claims, the Examiner notes that the language "successively laid one upon another" requires that the layers noted in claim 1 be in contact with one another, i.e. no intervening layer (that is not specified by the claims) can be present.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
